Welcome!

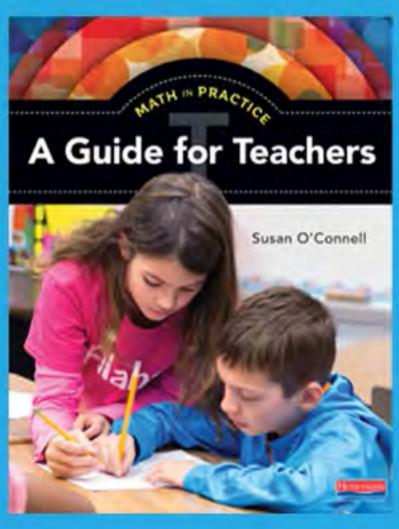

These 13 questions are a great way to jumpstart your book study of A Guide for Teachers.

This book is available as part of the Math in Practice resource.

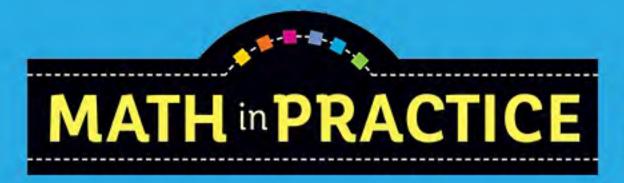

More information at: MathInPractice.com

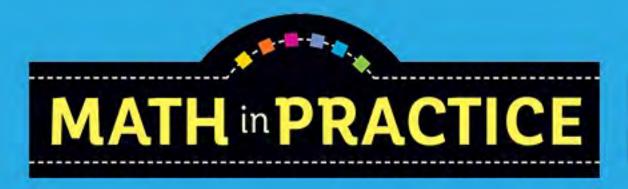

What were you expected to know and do when you were a K-5 math student? How has "math proficiency" changed for students today?

From A Guide for Teachers
Introduction

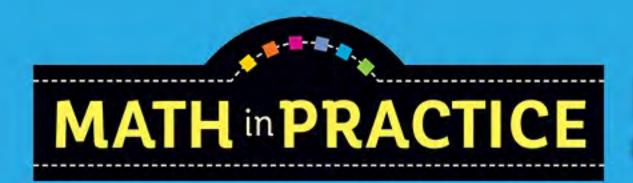

How does this change in the meaning of proficiency push us to rethink traditional math teaching practices?

From A Guide for Teachers
Introduction

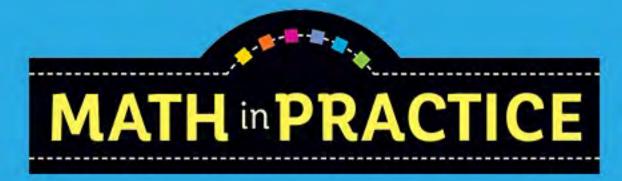

What succeses or frustrations have you expereinced in shifting from "telling" to discovery? What math concepts fit a discovery lesson best?

From A Guide for Teachers
Ch. 1: Step Back and Let Them Think

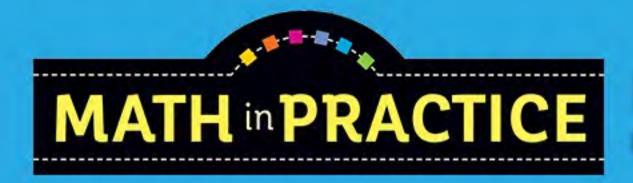

How might teachers help students learn to think like problem solvers?

From A Guide for Teachers
Ch. 1: Step Back and Let Them Think

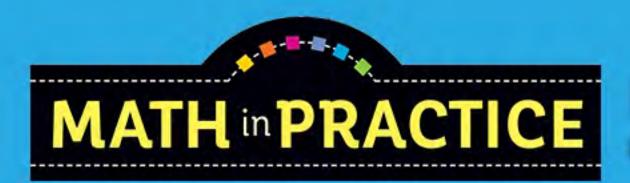

How can content progressions (knowing what comes before or after a skill) support and shape your planning?

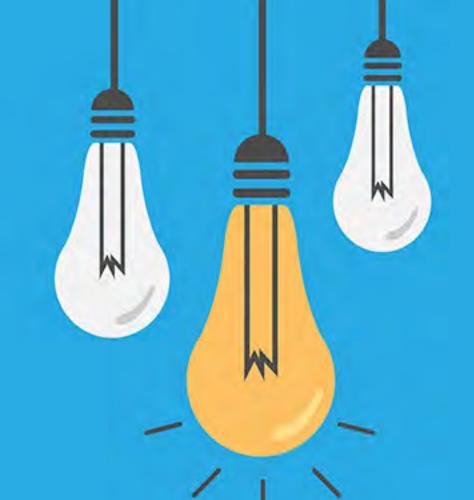

From *A Guide for Teachers*Ch. 2: Build Bridges, Make Connections

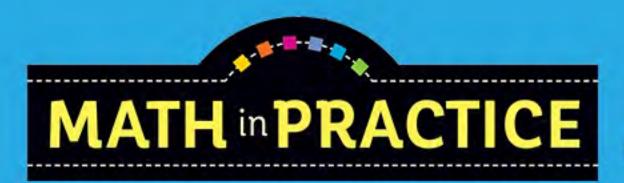

How can children's literature provide a context for math ideas? What is a book you've used to teach a related math skill or concept?

From *A Guide for Teachers*Ch. 2: Build Bridges, Make Connections

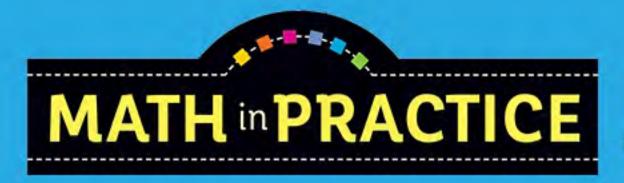

Why is it helpful for students to explore different models for a math concept? Talk about a way you've used models for a skill or concept.

From *A Guide for Teachers*Ch. 3: See It, Touch It, Move It

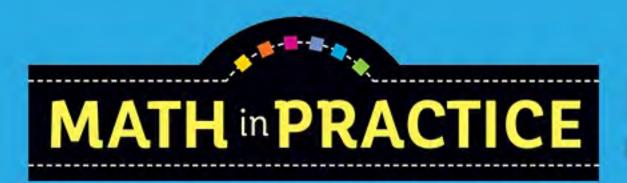

What is the role of models in solving problems? What models have been particularly helpful for your students?

From *A Guide for Teachers*Ch. 3: See It, Touch It, Move It

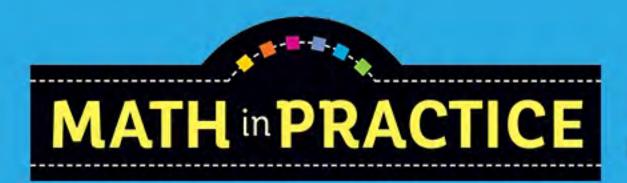

What generates talk in math class? How can we help our students talk productively and precisely? What have you tried?

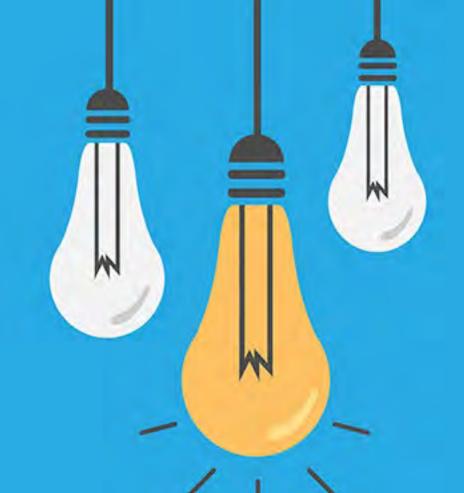

From *A Guide for Teachers*Ch. 4: Talk About It, Write It Down

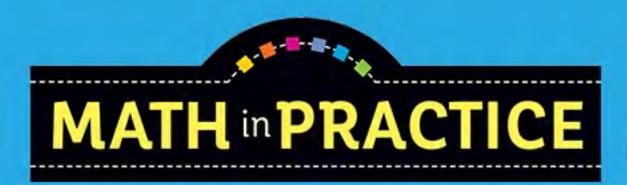

How do you integrate talk and writing into your math lessons?

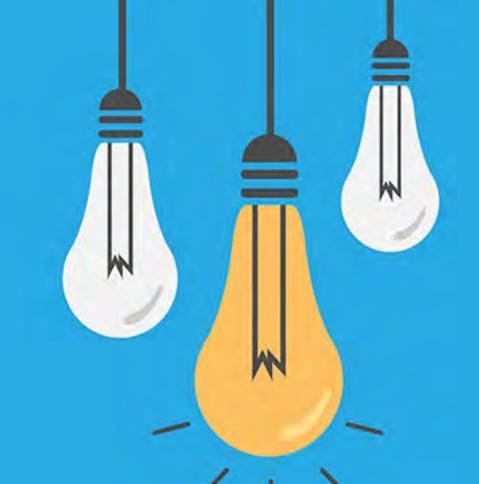

From *A Guide for Teachers*Ch. 4: Talk About It, Write It Down

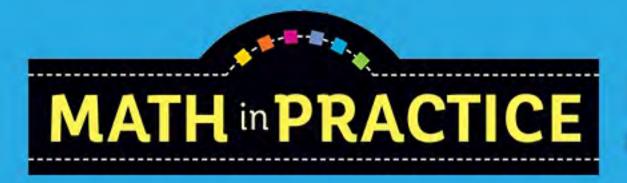

What types of formative assessment have you found particularly helpful? How do you use what you learn?

From *A Guide for Teachers*Ch. 5: Watch, Listen, Adjust

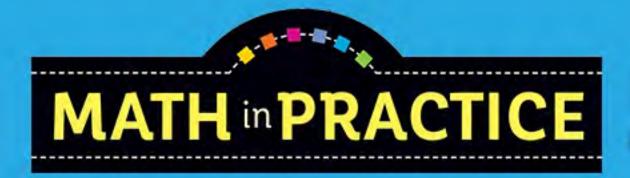

How do you modify math tasks for different learners? How do you decide when modification makes sense?

From *A Guide for Teachers*Ch. 5: Watch, Listen, Adjust

What is a big idea you take away from this book study? How might your math teaching change going forward?

From *A Guide for Teachers*Conclusion